

Planning for Your Long-term Future

When you or your loved one plans to live an independent lifestyle in a secure community, it takes the pressure off everyone's shoulders. When the choice is a Senior Life Plan Community like Concord Reserve, there's peace of mind knowing you'll enjoy independent living with options for care if needed. Here are some things to consider:

- Community and Social Connections: It's essential to participate in social activities or volunteer opportunities that align with your interests and skills.
- Financial Security: Understanding your retirement benefits and resources ensures you're covered for all the things you may want or need.
- Health and Wellness: Access to insurance and other health and wellness resources supports you through different levels of care.
- Housing Accommodations: Secured living arrangements that suit your lifestyle and needs give peace of mind.
- Legal and Estate Planning: While it can be uncomfortable to discuss, setting legal and estate plans ensures your wishes are honored at every stage of life.

As the Executive Director of Concord Reserve, a not-for-profit Life Plan Community, I encourage everyone to start the conversation and make arrangements with the future in mind:

- Talk to the people you want to name in your health and legal documents to ensure they're on board and capable of their responsibilities.
- Keep an open mind and explore all your local resources, social services, and living options to build strong community ties and find what fulfills your needs.
- Make your home an accessible place to live now with safety features you may need down the road.

You don't want to make hasty decisions due to sudden life changes and end up choosing something you're not happy with. Now's the time to get proactive with your future.
